Letter to the Editor

Paul Sheehan's article, "Life's a bitumen nightmare as cities get hotter than hell" (February 15), highlights the need for new city precincts that offer more than just buildings.

The plan for Barangaroo absolutely addresses this issue as a major focus. 50% public open space, 2.7 hectares of Northern Cove and new harbour water area, a new Southern Cove, shade on the public promenade and the trees and soft-scaping with the Lend Lease plan all address this issue.

Barangaroo will be carbon neutral, water positive and generate zero waste, playing a significant part in addressing climate change for all of Sydney.

Detailed information on Barangaroo will be open for all interested at The Barangaroo Display, from February 24 at Barangaroo in the Old Ports Building (47-51 Hickson Road, Millers Point). For all information visit www.barangaroo.com
